

Anderson-davis, Inc. Announces New Workplace Harassment Prevention eLearning Course for Higher Educators, Faculty, Staff, Supervisors and Students

The leader in harassment prevention training offers the course to colleges, universities and other schools and includes video scenarios showing practical resolution skills.

Denver, Col. / November 8, 2011 -- Anderson-davis, Inc., a trusted leader in harassment prevention and respectful workplace training for over 30 years, announced today the introduction of their new on-line Workplace Harassment: Prevention and the Law Course that was designed specifically for higher education.

The online course is available in two versions. The courses address specific issues relevant to supervisors, faculty and staff. The online training courses include over thirty full motion video scenarios that demonstrate practical resolution skills using engaging episodic scenarios. The courses are personalized with the campus' policy against harassment and is legally defensible in all fifty states.

The training program reviews the laws impact on the campus' harassment policy, protected characteristics harassment, and new scenarios developed specifically for the education version of the training. It includes modules in escalation, low grade, "just joking", dating, research project settings, and faculty language, students responses and faculty comments.

An effective sexual harassment prevention curriculum is central to the training efforts of every organization, including college campuses. With over thirty years in the industry, Anderson-davis brings a wealth of experience and knowledge to the field of employee training.

Dr. Menah Pratt-Clarke, Associate Director of the Office of Equal Opportunity and Access At the University of Illinois said, "Colleges and universities that are sensitive to issues of climate and compliance must have an effective and efficient harassment and discrimination prevention education program. The Workplace Harassment: Prevention and the Law online products address this critical need. Its interactive modules are engaging and informative; its online format is convenient; and its content is relevant and specifically tailored to address the unique issues that arise in a college environment involving faculty, staff, supervisors, and students."

"We are thrilled to be able to bring this new harassment training to the education market. Clearly there has been a need for high level online harassment prevention training courses that are in alignment with the mission of providing quality education", said Stephen Anderson, President of Anderson-davis.

Anderson-davis is an experienced harassment compliance training provider offering blended training solutions, including customized training programs on sexual/protected characteristic harassment prevention and effective investigation techniques.

Anderson-davis courseware was reviewed by the national law firm of Epstein, Becker and Green.
